Wahlquist begins campus trek

D.S. Perez

DAILY SENIOR STAFF EDITOR

For eight hours Monday, Jeff Paul, director of the Chicano Resource Center, watched the Nor Cal moving company pick up his library and move it across the length of the campus, from its old place in Wahlquist North to its new home in Modular A.

Although he received no new furnishings, the new setting pleased Paul.

"I'm glad it's over with," Paul said. "The movers were great, and this space ... it's a good job. Looks good."

The Chicano Resource Center will share Modular A — located near 10th and San Fernando streets — with the Africana Center, the Steinbeck Center and the Beethoven Center. The centers had to relocate because the Wahlquist buildings will be torn down this summer to make room for the new Joint Library that will serve San Jose State University and the city of San Jose.

In a January interview with Jim Zavagno, facilities planner for Facilities Development and Operations, he said the departments and offices in the Wahlquist buildings would be moved in segments over the course of a few weeks. Originally scheduled to be the last segment of the Wahlquist building to move during spring break, the portions of Wahlquist that were to inhabit the business modulars became the first wave leaving the doomed building.

According to memorandums and a sheet hanging on the door of Wahlquist Central, the first day of relocation is to start Thursday and finish April 17. The modular occupants, which also include business operations and financial and administrative program planning, were to move Thursday and reopen Monday.

According to Dan Johnson, associate vice president of Facilities Development and Operations, the delay in schedule came about because of bad weather delaying installation of key items into the Student Services Center — located on as the first floor of the 10th Street garage.

He said the amount of work — that took nine to 12 months — was exceptional.

"I think everyone's going to be surprised at the space and design of that 98,000 square feet and the

Spartan men's basketball player Ben Sanders entered a plea of no contest to a gun possession charge

Sanders

Wednesday morning in front of San Francisco Municipal Judge Kate Tsenin, said Bruce Funk, Sanders' attorney.

Funk said Sanders entered the plea of no contest because he "wanted to get on with his life."

Fred Gardner, spokesman for San Francisco District Attorney Terence Hallinan, said Sanders chose 360 hours of community service over 30 days in county jail.

Funk said Sanders was also placed on court probation for three years and must complete the community service hours during that time.

"I'm sure he'll finish them over the summer," Funk said.

Under probation, Sanders won't have to report to anyone — he just has to behave himself, Funk said.

Sanders' charges stem from a New Year's Eve incident in San Francisco. He had been carrying an unloaded gun in his right front pocket, according to a police report.

Sanders, along with teammates Kevin Blunt, Ben Collins, Darnell Williams and Eric Griffin and his roommate Tyler Kerlin, were out at a grocery store when a security guard noticed the gun in Sanders' pocket. The guard then called the San Francisco Police Department and all six individuals were taken into custody. Only Griffin and Sanders were charged.

In Griffin's statement, he said the weapon was brought along on New Year's Eve because he had heard of the possibility of hate crimes.

Griffin was originally charged with carrying a concealed weapon. The police report stated there was ammunition found in his right pants pocket. However, the charges against Griffin were dropped the first week of February, before the first court date.

Griffin had no comment on Wednesday about Sanders' situation.

Mapping safety for Spring Break travel

Nadeen Sarkis

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Spring has finally rolled in, bringing with it warm, sun-filled days and the long awaited spring break.

As students begin preparing for trips outside California or out of the country, packing shorts, tanks and sunscreen isn't going to suffice for a vacation.

Students should set aside a few minutes to become informed on travel safety in order to have a safe spring break.

Alejandra Sanchez, a freshman majoring in engineering, said she can't wait to go home to Santa Maria in Southern California, where she plans to spend time with her parents.

"We'll go to San Diego for a couple days, and we're sure to go to Tijuana."

Tijuana is so close to San Diego that there's no reason not to go there to check it out," Sanchez said.

While Sanchez and other students are excited about the trips they plan for spring break, the U.S. Department of State encourages students to learn as much as possible about the countries they plan to travel to.

Students should be aware of the culture, politics

Supreme Court upholds system in decision

Donna Carmichael

DAILY SENIOR STAFF EDITOR

On Wednesday, the U.S. Supreme Court decided a landmark case for students at public colleges and universities across America.

The decision ruled against the plaintiffs in Board of Regents, University of Wisconsin vs. Southworth, in which three former law school students from the University of Wisconsin — now graduated — did not want their mandatory student fees going to campus organizations that opposed their ideological or political beliefs.

The students said such use of their mandatory student fees was a violation of their First Amendment rights to free speech.

The court unanimously disagreed, upholding the University of Wisconsin's student fee system, which the justices said did not violate any student's free speech rights. Hearing the news mid-morning on Wednesday, Associated Students President Geoffrey Sakala of California State University, Sacramento said, "We are so relieved."

"The decision is a victory for student governments and for free speech at public colleges and universities," Sakala said.

"This case has been hanging there in the back everybody's mind for about a year. If the decision had gone the other way, it would have severely hampered our student government's ability to function ... and could have done us in," he said, referring to all the rebates — and even litigation — students could have demanded.

Akbar Shetty, Associated Students director for student resource affairs at San Jose State University, said the ruling — if it had gone the other way — would have been a "death knell" for A.S. organizations and other campus auxiliaries that rely on mandatory student fees.

In the ruling, Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote the First Amendment permits a public university to charge its students an activity fee used to fund a program to facilitate extracurricular student speech if the program is viewpoint neutral.

Kennedy elaborated on the meaning of the neutrality viewpoint position.

"When a university requires its students to pay fees to support the free speech of other students, all in the interest of open discussion, it may not prefer some viewpoints over others," Kennedy

A.S. elections on pace for 2,000 votes

Wearing broad smiles and waving brightly colored squares of paper, candidates for the Associated Students elections campaigned tirelessly Wednesday. Almost everyone walking near the Student Union received a plea to vote and a flier.

The voting areas bustled with students busily filling in their ballots, seemingly in defiance of last year's low voter turnout of less than 1,200 people.

"I would say that it's heavier," said polling official Betty Davis about the voting. "Of course, the weather's better too."

"Voter turnout right now ... it looks like it's been better this year," said Claire Hargreaves, the chief election officer for A.S.

Hargreaves estimated about 1,000 people voted Wednesday, and she is expecting approximately another 1,000 on Thursday.

A.S. election campaign disappointing

As a political science major, I regret to say that I am extremely disappointed with the way our potential candidates have handled this A.S. election. Not only have they failed in promoting the importance of the event, they have failed to meet adequate standards set for representing our school.

I realize that San Jose State University is a commuter school and there is not much interest in our elections, but that does not mean that the candidates should treat the elections any different. At a recent meet the candidates forum, our potential A.S. presidents did not even have the decency to dress for the occasion. Not a single candidate even wore a tie. At minimum, a tie should have been worn.

These people are supposed to represent us. When was the last time you saw President Caret wearing anything less than a tie at a meeting involving SJSU? My guess would be that you haven't.

As a former athlete, I know how much trouble our athletic program goes through to make sure the athletes represent our school well while they are on the road. But it is apparent that the same care cannot be made for our A.S. president. What bothers me the most is that this type of knowledge should be common sense. First appearances are crucial when it comes to anything, especially when running for student body president. How can I vote for somebody who doesn't even realize this?

I have been given fliers about what each candidate intends to do if elected, but the problem is they don't say how they plan to accomplish each goal. To me, goals are meaningless unless there is a plan behind them.

Simply telling us that you plan to work out a deal with City Hall to solve our parking problem is not a plan. It is an idea that I am sure has been thought of before. To be honest, I don't think that I have even seen the candidates on campus talking to the students, and I am here all day, every day.

How are we suppose to know who they are? I am not going to go out of my way and vote for somebody simply because a sign on campus says so. Speaking of signs, half of them are breaking and laying on the ground. How sloppy does that look?

If I was running, I guarantee I would not let my sign, that seems to be the only way to get people to vote, lay on the ground while getting trampled by the students. This lack of commitment to the election shows that it is not even being taken seriously by the candidates. And, if they don't care, why should I? I can only hope our newly elected candidate does a better job in office than he does running for office.

Measure P fails to fix computer problems

I really, really feel like breaking my computer. It took all the self-control in the world to resist picking up this Macintosh, heaving it through the second-story window next to me and sending it to its destruction on the patio of Dwight Bentel Hall.

You see, as I sat in front of this evil thing for seven hours Tuesday night, the computer decided to crash seven times and seriously delay my page layout. I felt obligated to give the computer a crash of my own — only this would be a one-time-only deal.

I don't expect you to care. Maybe a few people from the journalism department would if they came to class and saw pieces of the demon computer sprawled across the ground.

For the most part, a majority of you probably care as much about my computer problems as you do about the Associated Students elections.

Judging by voting figures in years past, that would be all too much sympathy coming my way.

Wait though. A.S. Computers. Yes, I think I'm on to something here.

Our good friends over at A.S. seem to recognize this computer problem isn't just occurring in the Spartan Daily. Rather, it's a campus-wide epidemic.

This is why when all 27,000 of us went to vote Wednesday or today, we saw something called Measure P on the ballot.

Measure P wants to take $18 out of our pockets. In exchange for those 18 bucks, we are promised a "state-of-the-art A.S. computer lab and sponsored services."

On top of all that, it will be open 24-hours-a-day.

Let me tell you, when I heard this news, I was singing. I was dancing. I was a happy guy.

Yes, I saw this as the 100-foot eraser that would wipe away all of San Jose State University's problems with a single stroke.

Oh sorry, I got caught up in that sarcasm thing again. I had promised none of that stuff this week, so let me get back on track.

The way I think about it, building this new A.S. computer lab would be about as effective as me throwing my trusted Mac — trusted to screw up everyday — out of the window.

Both would get somebody's attention. Make them say, "Hey, what's going on over there?" And maybe even draw up a little interest among our zombie-like student body.

Would either really solve the problem? No.

Sure, I might look out the window and laugh, knowing that man is greater than machine.

And sure, Leo Davila, our trusted president, might smile that sly, politician smile of his, as he looks at the computer lab he helped create.

Again, would it really solve the problem?

If we didn't have a computer lab on campus, it might be a solution. But we have a computer lab. I promise. I've been there.

It may not work all the time, but it's there.

Last semester, the lab came under attack for having many of its workstations out of order, which is something that is hard to avoid with computers. Ask the Spartan Daily — we'll tell you about computer problems.

I hardly believe building a new computer lab will alleviate the current computer problems SJSU faces.

If it happens, we will just have more computers to have more problems. The issue as I saw it — and I used to go to the Washington Square Hall lab often — was never a lack of computers. They just weren't working.

I doubt people were in line until 11 p.m. trying to find a computer to work on, and I doubt people are going to line up to use this new 24-hour lab at say, 3 a.m.

Come on.

With $18 in additional fees — six of which would go to financial aid policies — $324,000 would be generated for this computer lab project per semester, almost $650,000 a year.

However, the measure doesn't state exactly how this mind-boggling amount of money will be spent.

It lists: 24-hour service, 100 stations, tech support and more. Before I give A.S. this money, I want specifics.

I want to know what my money will be paying for. "Minimum of 100 computer stations" doesn't tell me too much. What kind of computers? What can they do? How can they help me? These are the answers I want.

These are the answers they fail to give me.

I, for one, do not want to give up another $18 so Mr. Davila and his comrades can become enshrined with this computer lab.

I see it as less of a solution to the problem and more of a spectacle of Davila, pounding on his chest and screaming, "I'm the man."

The decision is in your hands.

You're the students.

I already placed my vote.

You should do the same.

And, if you say this lab is what we want, then at least we did this democratically.

Just make sure there are some windows.

Nonalcoholic drinks better way to celebrate

Last semester, I celebrated my 21st birthday more than I should have. I was winding down each week with some sort of liquor either by myself or with a friend.

Whether I was drinking with friends, dancing or just goofing off, it seemed the party excuses were as endless as the drinks people bought me. But spending my days celebrating life with a bottle, pipe or joint wasn't all that productive.

Preaching from the soap box about the hazards of drugs and alcohol has never been one of my favorite activities because drugs and alcohol haven't had a significant effect on my life.

Moderation has always been the key to my happiness.

Although there have been those few occasions when I partied until sunrise, I've never forgotten what I did the night before.

Like the beer commercial says, I know when to say when.

I guess I'm lucky.

Some people's lack of limits drives them toward a six feet deep hole in the ground.

Take the four college-age males who were partying in Hartford, Conn.

They had been drinking and snorting prescription drugs — perhaps even heroin. Unfortunately, the mix was just enough to kill a 22-year-old Trinity College student.

Investigating officers at the scene said the individuals may have been celebrating the end of midterms.

Two of the students who had been celebrating with the victim were charged with possession of narcotics.

Donna Shalala, a former chancellor from the University of Wisconsin, identified alcohol as the biggest campus problem.

The heaviest drinkers obtain the lowest grades at two-year or four-year institutions, said the Minnesota Institute of Public Health. Almost one-third of the students at four-year schools reported missing one class due to alcohol or other drug use, the institute said.

What we students don't realize is drinking and drugs aren't the only ways to celebrate a rite of passage or the passing of a test.

Drinking your problems away doesn't always make them better. In fact, personal experience has told me that drinking just prolongs the inevitable. Problems don't solve themselves — people do. Speaking from experience, my problems got worse with each hit of a joint or sip of alcohol. They never got solved.

In the past three years, 216 drug abuse related violations have occurred at San Jose State University, according to the University Police Department. Considering the 27,000 or so students that attend this campus each semester, only a small number of the student population was involved in those incidents — about .008 percent.

But not all drug or alcohol related infractions are reported. And the majority of students don't live on campus.

Instead of spending a night with a bottle or a pipe in hand, how about a dinner party with some friends, topped off with two or three video rentals. Or, if indoors isn't too energizing, maybe some basketball at the local park or a round of miniature golf.

The outlets are there for us students to release our stress and frustration. Just because we are within spitting distance of the downtown bars doesn't mean we need to drown our celebrations with a pint of Guinness. Maybe some warm sunshine and a mocktail would be a better way to enjoy the occasion.

Senior finance major David Miyako and junior Lindsay Martin vote Wednesday outside the Student Union. Miyako said he prepared before voting and knew exactly who and what he wanted to vote for.

this is his first time voting.

"I'm more involved with school organizations now, so I'm more aware of what's going on," Colmenero said.

Mike Tsai, a computer science major, simply said, "My teacher gave me extra credit."

Even though this is Tsai's first time voting in the A.S. elections, he said he may continue to do so in the future because once he read about the measures he would be voting on, he realized they were of some importance.

Some students weren't sure if they would be voting, even after talking with the candidates.

"I didn't know it was today," said Javier Avila, a junior in child development. "This one guy gave me a fortune cookie."

He was referring to Jose Martinez, who used fortune cookies, among other things, to further his campaign.

Avila said he wasn't sure if he would vote because he doesn't understand how A.S. affects him.

Other students felt differently. "It's very important to vote," said Tim Li, a junior in computer engineering. "I want to vote my beliefs."

Li also said he estimated half the students at SJSU are Asian, but they are underrepresented in A.S. because none of the A.S. executives are Asian.

"It's our school, so we should have a say in what's going on," said Geoff Bylund, a junior in advertising.

This is the first A.S. election Bylund has voted in, which he attributes to being part of a fraternity.

Bylund's fellow advertising major, Chris Darnell, said he voted "More to keep people out of office than to keep people in."

Darnell didn't want to mention any names.

This is also Darnell's first time voting in an A.S. election.

Susan Arias, a junior in sociology, said she voted "Because the president (Leo Davila) stopped me and asked me to vote."

Arias said she didn't have any prior knowledge of the candidates or the measures.

Another reason some students may have voted was because of simple boredom.

"I didn't have anything to do between classes," said freshman Chris Margason.

Margason said he's not too sure if it's all that important to vote in the A.S. elections.

Senior Gabriel Garcia said he didn't plan on voting. "(But) I'm in a fraternity, so maybe I should," he said.

Many of the candidates are members of fraternities, which receive $2 per member who votes, as do all student organizations.

Thursday will be the last day to vote in the student elections.

Two polling areas are open from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at Ninth and San Carlos streets, near Allen Hall and near the Student Union, in the Art Quad. Two more polling locations are open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. at Seventh and San Carlos, near Sweeney Hall and in front of Clark Library.

Great effects can't save this deadly dull, slow-paced 'Mission to Mars'

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Throughout history, films such as "2001, A Space Odyssey," "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "The Right Stuff," and "E.T." have delighted our minds and made us think about whether we are alone in the universe.

"Mission to Mars," is not one of those films.

The boring, feeble attempt of director Brian De Palma to make a good film falls flat and fails to provide the excitement and awe that his predecessors so effectively delivered.

De Palma, who has directed excellent films such as "Dressed to Kill," "Carrie," and "Scarface," has never directed a science fiction, space exploration film.

It shows. A solid cast, composed of Gary Sinise ("Forrest Gump," "Apollo 13," "The Green Mile"), Tim Robbins ("The Player," "Bob Roberts," "Arlington Road") and Connie Nielsen ("Rushmore," "The Devil's Advocate") is wasted by a slow story line and lack of character development.

Only Sinise, with funny one-liners, gets an occasional chuckle from the audience, but he also reminds them how cheesy this film is.

The story begins when mission commander Luke Graham (Don Cheadle) is marooned on Mars after a strange incident involving a sandstorm that cripples his spaceship and destroys all means of communication.

A rescue mission, composed of commander Woody Blake (Robbins), astronaut Jim McConnell (Sinise) and Dr. Terri Fisher (Nielsen) heads to Mars to save Graham and any other survivors from the failed mission.

However, the harsh Martian environment constantly jeopardizes the success of the mission.

What awaits them on Mars is perhaps the biggest secret of mankind.

Too bad the audience has to wait until 10 minutes before the film ends to find out.

One of Sinise's best moments is the scene when he and his crew encounter Cheadle on Mars, acting extremely violent and irrational.

And that's the only interesting thing in this film.

Robbins and Nielsen spent the film kissing and groping as a happily married couple would.

De Palma wasted these two talented actors, who could have done so much more.

Sinise spends the entire film lamenting the death of his wife. Although his talent shows in bits and pieces of the film, it's not that he may be experiencing some kind of asphyxia or psychological disorders, he says "Or maybe it's just the fact that this man lost all his crew and has been marooned on Mars for a long time."

Good space films should also have good musical sound tracks.

This is an easy equation, which De Palma fails miserably to accomplish.

The music is reminiscent of a bad 1960s vampire flick soundtrack.

Its monotonous lack of substance reminds one of bad late-night television movies, and "Mission to Mars" should become one of them.

The special effects are good, but as we learned from films such as "The Lost World: Jurassic Park," and "The Avengers," films with good special effects but no good story lines or acting find the video stores shelves fast.

If there is a bright spot in the movie, it is in the last 10 minutes, which is about the time half the audience will already be asleep.

Elton John readies soundtrack album

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don't talk to Elton John about slowing down.

"It's very hard for me to sit still," the British entertainer said as he embarked on a promotional campaign for a new album and his Broadway musical "Aida."

On the eve of his 53rd birthday, the piano-playing singer has mellowed a bit.

The soundtrack "Elton John's The Road to El Dorado" has six songs from the movie.

"I decided to write more and 11 made the cut," he said. "It's more like an Elton John album than a soundtrack, and I'm very happy with the result."

Besides juggling his musical projects, he's also passionate about charity work. The Elton John AIDS Foundation was formed in 1992.

Bowlers end year with gutter ball

Erik Anderson
DAILY STAFF WRITER

The men's bowling team competed Saturday and Sunday for the right to move on to the national championships next month, but they failed to qualify, finishing sixth in a field of eleven.

Only teams with the top four scores won the right to advance to the national championships, scheduled for April 21-25 in Wichita, Kan.

The women's team, competing in the sectional qualifiers as well, finished last in the field of six.

Even though all had not gone as planned for the men's bowling team, Lindsey Wong, the team's coach, thought the team had performed well.

"(Just) not as well as we'd like," he said.

Co-captain Jason Rehfeld finished the season with a team-high average of 202.3 and a game high of 277. The team's other co-captain, Brad Bargabus, averaging 201.0 for the season, bowled one perfect game of 300 — the total number of points possible.

CSU Northridge had won a direct seed into the men's sectional qualifiers by taking the Conference Intercollegiate Bowling Championship Feb. 26-27, Wong said.

A week earlier, the men's team won the Region 15 of the Association of College Unions International Tournament.

SJSU had won the other direct seed to the sectional qualifier.

The remaining field of 14 teams were determined on a system of cumulative points from conference and non-conference play.

"(It was) disappointing, but it was an experience ... hopefully, we can learn from it," Wong said.

Sheri Tomasaka, the women's coach, looked for silver linings.

"It's disappointing, but that's how it fell," she said about the men's team's failure to return to the national championships. "The women kind of knew within themselves which way things would go."

Last year, the men's team finished 10th nationally. The men's team had hoped to improve on that mark, said co-captain Brian Caldwell.

"That is the big show everybody wants to go to," he said last week. Caldwell had experienced national championship play last year for the first time.

Tomasaka looked to next year.

Only Loida Francisco — a graduating senior — will not be returning, she said. Others have expressed interest in joining the women's team as well.

"They (the women) should be a stronger team. They should finish in the top twenty," Tomasaka said.

Tomasaka said she is still deciding her role.

This season, she attended practice but did not go with the team on tournaments.

"Staying home three weeks in a row is kind of nice," she said.

Between 1992 and 1995, four SJSU men's teams competed in the national championships, with the 1993 team placing second.

The SJSU women's team finished 2nd nationally four times.

Kohjiro Kinno / Spartan Daily

Nolen Velasco, a freshman international business major, practices his bowling skills during team practice at the Student Union Bowling Center on March 16. The San Jose State University bowling team finished sixth in the sectional qualifier Saturday to end its season. The Spartan losses to Texas A&M and Louisville. She gave up 11 hits and six runs in seven innings.

The Spartans' record is now 9-16, as they head into a double header on Saturday at the SJSU Field against Texas A&M-Corpus Christi and UC Santa Barbara.

Filling injury gaps

According to head coach Sam Piraro, left-hander Chris Key and right-hander Chris Sherman — two relievers last season — were placed in the starting rotation because of injuries.

Key is currently tied for the conference lead in wins (5-0) and he is third in ERA (2.51).

tournament would have earned them a trip to the national championships in Wichita, Kan. The team earned a spot in the tournament by winning Region 15 of the Association of College Unions International Tournament.

Sherman leads the team in starts (7) and is second on the team in strikeouts with 26.

Standing 6-foot-7-inches tall, pitcher Jeremy Rogelstad is the tallest returning member of the 2000 Spartan baseball team.

He was also the team's top returning pitcher, according to head coach Sam Piraro.

After leading the team with 16 starts last season, Rogelstad has not been on the mound for SJSU a single time this season.

The junior right-hander broke a bone in his right foot in the fall and is out until further notice.

Another right-hander, sophomore Andy Cook, is recovering from shoulder surgery he had in October.

Spring Break in Hawaii

The Spartans will be spending their entire Spring Break in the state of Hawaii. Although they will be in an island paradise, the team may not have time to enjoy themselves, as they will be playing seven games in 12 days.

While in the islands, SJSU will be competing against the University of Hawai'i, Hawai'i Pacific and Hawai'i-Hilo.

The Spartans' first game will be against Hawai'i on Saturday. The Rainbows hold a 20-11 series advantage, but SJSU has won eight of the last 12 meetings.

SJSU's record is currently 15-8 overall and 3-3 in the Western Athletic Conference.

The San Jose State University softball team finished 13th in the Capital Classic Tournament at Sacramento State which concluded Sunday.

In its first game of the tournament Thursday, the Spartans defeated Utah State 8-6 behind winning pitcher Asia Easley.

Right fielder Katrina Gomes, designated hitter Kristen Foster and catcher Gina Saldana each had two hits for the Spartans.

On Friday, the Spartans lost two games in pool play, falling to Texas A&M 13-6 and then to tournament runner-up Oregon 7-1.

Saturday, SJSU lost to the eventual champion, California,

3-0 in the first round of bracket play.

Later in the day, the Spartans were defeated by Louisville 2-1, to end with a dismal 1-5 tournament record.

Making the Capital Classic all-tournament team for the Spartans was pitcher Christine Akin.

Spartan roundup

Staff report

■ The women's golf team won the Betsy Rawls Longhorn Classic Sunday behind a third place finish from Rebecka Heinmert, who finished third individually with a three-day total of 227 on the par-72 course.

Heinmert was also named Western Athletic Conference Women's Golfer of the Week for the week ending March 19. After sharing the lead of the first round with a 73, Heinmert went on to shoot rounds of 75 and 79.

■ Lucas Horrobin finished second in the Oregon Duck Invitational Tuesday after falling in a one-hole playoff to Oregon State's Anthony Arvidson as the men's golf team finished sixth in the three-day tournament held in Eugene, Ore.

Horrobin finished with a 212 after shooting a 1-under-par 71 on the tournament's final day and a 3-under 68 in the second day of action.

■ Charlotte Pierce of the swim team's trip to the NCAA Championships in Indianapolis Saturday yielded a 31st place finish in the 100-meter butterfly and a 41st in the 200-meter butterfly.

The freshman recorded a time of 1:02.06 in the 100 and 2:17.53 in the 200.

■ The tennis team swept past San Francisco with a 9-0 non-conference win Tuesday.

The Spartans (8-7) captured every singles match in straight sets. Anna Nordell defeated USF's Aaryn Volkmann 6-2, 6-0 and Helen Van defeated Hui Ming Kwan by the same score.

■ The gymnastics team finished third in the Western Independent Championships behind strong performances from Tracy Cheshier and Kimmy Cianci.

Cheshier finished fourth all-around with a mark of 38.325 and Cianci scored a 37.650 for sixth place.

way it can house all the departments from Wahlquist," he said.

All the work for the relocation effort has been paid for and scheduled, he said.

Johnson noted the early showings from Modular A is a good sign.

"Moving 350 people stations (from Wahlquist) is not a fun thing," Johnson said. "But it's important to get a good feeling for those moving into (the modulars and Student Services Center). Change generally makes people nervous."

Change has been a good thing for the Steinbeck Center.

According to Susan Shillinglaw, director of the Steinbeck Center, all of the Steinbeck Center's items fit into the new location.

"It's been excellent," said Katie Rodger, who works in the Steinbeck Center. "It's shifted our perspective; we're more positive now of the move. It's been quick and efficient... very professional."

Rodger said the Steinbeck Center workers packed certain items themselves, and she said there was no damage to any items during the move.

She added that fireproof materials are in the modular, and fire and motion alarms and reinforced floors were installed.

Another aspect is the location, which Rodger, Paul and Johnson cited is near the heart of campus.

Johnson added the Chicano Resource Center — which, according to Paul, had been bumped around the campus in the '70s and '80s — would benefit from a location that was made for it — and in prime view.

"Those parts of the Wahlquist

Development and Operations

building had been squeezed into an old place," Johnson said of the new occupants of Modular A. "This was specifically designed for them... this temporary space that will be their home for the next three-and-a-half to four years."

Rodger said the new location was less confusing to people, as some would not know in which Wahlquist — North, South or Central — the center was located.

"This will be more exposure for us as well," she said. "We had some days where no one stopped in at all. With the Student Union nearby, that may change."

Paul said what he considered a huge positive was the fact that the Chicano Resource Center will be more visible and accessible to students. Both he and Rodger said the proximity of the Student Union also helps.

Students said they knew about the existence of the four occupants of Modular A, but Wahlquist North's distant location made it an afterthought on campus.

"I had a class in Mexican-American studies," said Andrea Porras, a marketing major. "I knew about the Chicano Resource Center but never went to it. It's a good location for it — too bad I'm graduating after this semester."

Paul is pleased with what he has seen, so far.

"One thing about being over here — there will be no noise distractions," Paul said, referring to the construction of both the Joint Library and the new San Jose City Hall that is planned to be across the street.

The Chicano Resource Center is placed in the same room as the Africana Center, but Paul said the amount of space was not an issue.

"We have the same amount of space as we did, and it will be different sharing space with the Africana Center," he said.

His aide, Vincent Rivero, said he was a bit disoriented from the square building, instead of the elongated form of the old space at Wahlquist North.

Paul noted a few problems about the state of the modular. He said the Chicano Resource Center needs to add a book drop and change a lock that was placed backward on a door.

Phone lines and computer connections are yet to be installed, he said.

"We have the break, so there's plenty of time to tweak with the problems we have," Paul said.

Paul said the Chicano Library will be closed during the break, although he may make exceptions to students who contact him. Rodger said the schedule of the Steinbeck Center during the break has not been finalized, but she said it will be open.

Kerlin, Sanders' roommate, who was taken into custody over the incident but released, said that when Sanders came home, he was relieved that the case was finished.

"It shouldn't have made it this far," Kerlin said. "He could get (the) community service hours over and get on with life. It's good he doesn't have to go to jail."

"It was a simple mistake that he wants to put behind him," Funk said. "It was an unfortunate mistake, but he took full responsibility with his apology. He wants to move on with his life," Funk said.

Sanders couldn't be reached for comment Wednesday.

Sanders earlier issued a letter of apology at a basketball game stating, "It was a stupid thing to do when I am counted on to represent this university in the best way possible."

He went on to say that he was "truly sorry" and apologized to the university, his coaches, the athletic department, the team's fans, his teammates and his parents.

Sanders' letter and another from Griffin were handed out during a two-game suspension that was mandated by the athletic department. The SJSU athletics policy calls for the suspension of athletes who are charged with misdemeanors.

"He could get (the) community service hours over and get on with his life. It's good he doesn't have to go to jail."

Fees

wrote. While the decision upholding the University of Wisconsin's fee system was unanimous, three justices refused to join the decision's language requiring viewpoint neutrality.

Justice David H. Souter was joined by justices John Paul Stevens and Stephen G. Breyer in writing the dissenting opinion on the neutrality requirement.

"I agree that the university's scheme is permissible, but do not believe the court should take the occasion to impose a cast-iron viewpoint neutrality requirement to uphold it," Souter wrote.

Charles Goetzl, a student affairs counselor at CSU Hayward for 20 years, provided an analogy to help understand the Supreme Court's decision upholding the use of mandatory fees at public colleges and universities.

"The decision is essentially saying that no one individual's right outweighs the collective right to have social programs or decision making," Goetzl said.

"Suppose someone said, 'I don't want to pay taxes that go to university libraries unless they take away all the books that advocate subjects I don't believe in.' That's the parallel," Goetzl said.

The key plaintiff, Scott Southworth, a Christian conservative — who initiated the case in 1996 along with fellow law school students Amy Schoepke and Keith Bannach — said he was frustrated at seeing his mandatory student activity fees going to organizations he personally disagreed with.

sonally disagreed with.

Jordan Lorence, the plaintiffs' attorney, said paying the mandatory student activity fee is "coercive," because students can't graduate or get their transcripts if they don't pay the funds that support groups with opposing beliefs.

On the other side, the University of Wisconsin argued that in a college atmosphere with differing viewpoints, all groups are entitled to support.

Goetzl said the plaintiff's position begs a point.

"No one forced those students to go to the University of Wisconsin — a public school. One of the conditions in going there was paying a student association fee — it was known beforehand, not sprung on the plaintiffs after enrolling," he said.

Goetzl said the whole case emphasizes the concept of participatory democracy.

"Student associations exist to benefit all students on campus. But the process by which student money is spent has to be open, inclusive and democratic," he said. "If students don't like the way their money is spent, there are plenty of mechanisms in the system to make their views count, such as committees, open forums and other vehicles."

In Wednesday's ruling, one aspect of the mandatory fee case was not upheld.

The Supreme Court ruled officials at public colleges at universities can not "defund" a campus group, even if such action is approved by a majority vote of the student body.

The court said allowing a majority vote of students to cancel out a university's commitment to neutrality in allocating student fee-based funds would

"It's perfectly appropriate for universities to use student fees to further that end (open dialogue)."

— James Brent political science professor be unconstitutional.

Commenting on the Supreme Court's decision, which wasn't expected until late spring, SJSU political science Professor James Brent said the decision is a great one because a university is a place where campus organizations ought to be encouraged to engage in dialogue.

"It's perfectly appropriate for universities to use student fees to further that end (open dialogue)," Brent said.

Alex Arteaga, director of government relations for the California State Student Association, said his staff in Sacramento heard about the pivotal Supreme Court decision as soon as it broke.

"We are absolutely elated," Arteaga said.

"It is the responsibility of our student associations to promote a range of political and ideological beliefs to allow our students to be better informed," he said. "This decision furthers the ability of all students to get involved with their individual campus governments."

and customs of the country in which they travel and should respect the country's customs, manners, rules and laws, including dress codes, according to the U.S. Department of State.

Drugs, alcohol and disorderly behavior can ruin vacations.

Every year, nearly 2,500 Americans are arrested abroad, in which half are on narcotics charges, according to U.S. Department of State literature.

Tonje Silfvenius, an international student from Norway, said people have the misconception that drugs are legal to use in all of Europe.

However, a drug that may be legal to use in one country is not necessarily allowed in a neighboring country.

"Amsterdam is a very special city, where you can go into a hash bar and smoke marijuana while ordering pizza," Silfvenius said.

The Netherlands is the only country in Europe in which drugs have been legalized.

As for the rest of Europe, students can get arrested for minor drug possession in public, Silfvenius said.

Silfvenius, along with Summer Villarreal, a psychology major, are co-directors of the Prevention Education Program, located in the Health building at San Jose State University, where advice and referrals are available to students.

Silfvenius and Villarreal had set up a booth during the Safe Spring Break Fair Monday and Tuesday.

They were passing out kits, which included condoms, facts about alcohol and drinking, a list of available recreational places in San Jose and a recipe for a non-alcoholic cocktail.

"We encourage students to come by the PEP center for more information," said Villarreal, who was also passing out brochures on alcohol and marijuana.

"We're not here to preach, we just want to educate," Silfvenius said about the counseling services the center offers.

Silfvenius, who has traveled all around Europe, said she is aware of the customs in the different countries in Europe and is available to counsel students who plan to travel to Europe for Spring Break.

Students who can't make it to the center this week can log on to the Department of State's Web site at <http://travel.state.gov>, which also provides other helpful tips for students.

The Web site offers current public announcements and a list of what Americans can and cannot do in foreign countries. Students can also obtain a list of U.S. embassies and consulates worldwide, along with medical information.

You can miss a class.
You can miss a midterm.
But you never ever have to miss Buffy.

It pauses live TV and records your favorite shows digitally, automatically, without videotape, every time they're on.

Philips introduces TiVo[™], the world's first Personal TV Service. And it's changing television forever. How? Well, let's say you're chilling to the game and suddenly the parental units call. Panic attack? Not with TiVo. It lets you pause the live broadcast until you're off the phone. And all those shows you miss because you're pulling all nighters? Problem solved. Tell TiVo what show you like just once, and from then on it'll find and digitally record future episodes automatically. In fact, over time TiVo learns what you like and finds more of it. It's time you experienced TiVo for yourself (available only on the Philips Personal TV Recorder). You'll never look at TV the same way again.

Quantum Hard drive

TiVo. You run the show.[™]
